World of Words Open House, page 4
The University of Florida has become the first American institution to receive funding from the European Union to establish a Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence (JMCE) on campus.

The center, named after one of the most influential supporters of European integration throughout most of the 20th century, will be entirely dedicated to European Union (EU) topics and will support an annual visiting scholar program, additional special topic classes, and a related yearly workshop. The visiting scholars, who will spend a minimum of two weeks in Gainesville working with UF faculty and teaching a special two-week intensive course, can be either academics from European Union universities or current practitioners in the field of European integration, such as EU government officials.

The creation of a Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence at UF is proof of the increasing international recognition of the strength of the university’s European studies programs. There are currently 107 such centers at universities worldwide, and the vast majority are in EU member or candidate countries. This year, Japan was the only other non-European country to receive a grant from the EU to create a new center. The new JMCE will be housed within the UF Center for European Studies (CES). The establishment of the new center is also important because it will allow UF to compete for a series of other European Union grants and collaborative research opportunities open only to JMCEs.

The new JMCE’s mission of educating non-Europeans about the European Union is vital for Americans and Floridians in today’s world. The EU is America’s largest trading partner and our most important political ally, and for Florida, the EU is our biggest foreign direct investor. The EU’s investments account for more than 145,000 jobs throughout the state.
Debut of my WORLD
New Interactive Computer Program

Explore www.digitalworlds.ufl.edu/projects/CenterForEuropeanStudies/myWorld/default.html to explore our brand new interactive language learning computer program called my WORLD! The program is intended to interest students ages 13 through 19 in languages. The program, designed by UF’s Digital Worlds Institute, is styled after the popular website, myspace. Users of my WORLD can choose to watch videos or commercials in eight languages (Greek, Hungarian, Polish, Turkish, Spanish, Arabic, Chinese, or Akan) and see the lyrics in that language along with the English translation. They can also see and hear 13 phrases spoken in the eight languages and see a phonetic spelling as well. To provide additional cultural information, historical trivia and facts about the languages and countries in which the language is spoken scroll next to the main screen. There is also information about the countries in which each of the eight included languages are spoken and the number of speakers worldwide. Florida statistics are available too.

We will work with curriculum specialists at the School District of Alachua County to decide the best way to get the program into schools. Students could use my WORLD individually or in a classroom setting. Additional modules may be added to the program in the future.

Our thanks go to CES faculty and faculty and students from other language departments who recorded the phrases, supplied translations, and fact-checked text.

Wigilia!

The Polish Student Association, with support from CES and Student Government, hosted the annual Polish Christmas celebration the first Sunday in December. Students and community members cooked traditional Polish holiday foods to share. About 50 celebrants sang carols, enjoyed feasting on pierogi, barszcz, and other homemade treats, and told fortunes for Andrzejki (pronounced onjaykee) by pouring melted wax through a skeleton key. Special congratulations to Michael Gajdeczka who was “predicted” to become the wealthiest UF-PSA student when his right shoe was the first to “walk” out the door of the Keene Faculty Center.

Open House for Grad Students

An intimate and informational open house was held at the CES main office to introduce grad students from other departments to our programs and faculty. Students talked to staff and other students about the CES Graduate Certificate in Modern European Studies and about CES grants and fellowships. Winners of this year’s Foreign Language and Area Studies grants were feted as well.
First Annual Language Open House
A Smashing Success

Köszönöm... Hoşçakal... Σαγαπώ... Gátoři do toho... Dziękuje.

These words, and others in more than 17 languages, were being recited at the World of Words Language Open House on September 28. Our first open house was part of the University of Florida Foundation Capital Campaign Kick-off.

The event began with opening remarks by former US Senator and FL Governor Bob Graham who stressed the importance of learning a foreign language for personal and professional success.

For the entire day, students, alumni, and faculty could take any number of 5-minute language lessons or attempt to stump a human translator (try to translate “My hovercraft has weasels” into Turkish or Chinese). They could also test their knowledge with several different geography and landmark quizzes or watch foreign language TV commercials.

Our new interactive language learning program, myworLd, was debuted as well.

We estimate about 500 people enjoyed one or more activities that day. There was a steady flow of people throughout both rooms. Impromptu language lessons formed wherever space permitted.

One fun aspect of the day was the passport—a card that the students could redeem for prizes after they had earned points by trying lessons or quizzes. Pepsi had donated hundreds of imprinted goodies from t-shirts to stadium cushions, all emblazoned with “Learn a Language” and “Go Gators!” in at least three different languages. Competition was fierce for t-shirts.

We have already begun to plan an event for next year that may be expanded to include area schools.

New Class added to the curriculum

Asst. Director Petia Kostadinova and Conor O’Dwyer, Asst. Prof. in Political Science and CES, were awarded a grant from the Lifelong Learning Programme of the European Commission to develop a new Jean Monnet module at UF. The course titled “European Economic Integration: Politics and Policy” will be offered for the first time in Spring 2008 as EUS4931/POS4931, and will be team-taught by Kostadinova and O’Dwyer.

Thematically, the course is divided into several subjects. In the first part of the course, class readings and discussions focus on the economic (growth and efficiency) and political (social justice and cohesion) justifications for economic integration, as well as the ongoing debate of the future direction of the Economic and Monetary Union (EMU), in the context of the debate between neo-liberal and regulated capitalism.

The second portion of the class focuses on the political economy of EU economic integration prior to the Eastern enlargement of the Union and discusses several policies aimed at unlocking the market efficiencies of the European economies, the single market, the EMU, and competition policy.

The third section of the course covers post-Eastern enlargement economic integration. A major focus of this section is the processes and tools for building political support for continued integration in both the new and the old member states.

The fourth section of the course provides students with a global perspective on the process of EU economic and monetary integration. This section discusses topics such as the linkages between economic integration and globalization, the future of economic integration in the EU, and whether the EU’s model of successful integration could be replicated in other regions of the world. The course module concludes with a one-day seminar, aimed at local high school teachers, where the students present and discuss their research papers produced in the course of the class.

The addition of this grant makes UF one of only three US institutions to have ever been awarded two Jean Monnet Modules. For more information, contact the instructors at petiak@ces.ufl.edu or codwyer@ufl.edu.

During the last two weeks of July, twelve foreign language teachers from across the state attended our Language Teacher Summer Institute (LTSI). Mornings were spent in the classroom with English and Linguistics Professor Roger Thompson covering topics such as working with multiple levels of proficiency, learning in a cultural context, and measuring progress. Afternoon sessions with Gillian Lord (Linguistics and Romance Languages) and Christina Overstreet (Germanic and Slavic Languages) in the computer lab focused on discovering, using, and evaluating language teaching resources available online.

CES joins ARCS

CES recently joined 50 other universities to become an institutional member of the American Research Center in Sofia, Bulgaria (ARCS). Institutional members, such as Yale University, Duke University, Harvard University, and Johns Hopkins University help to establish a broader scholarly network of academics who will manage ARCS activities, established in 2004.

A principal aim of ARCS is to foster research and collaboration between North American scholars and those in Southeast European countries, formerly deprived of access to Western scholarship. Albania, Bulgaria, Macedonia, Romania, Serbia and Montenegro share a remarkable historical heritage and strong cultural ties. The intellectual community thus realized should become a significant resource for overcoming some of the longstanding ethnic and national problems in the region. Cornell University is the host institution of ARCS in the United States. Find more information at www.einaudi.cornell.edu/ars.

Under the initiative of Enterprise Florida’s Joe Kulenovic, The Florida Economic Research Network (F.E.R.N.) was established in Spring 2007. F.E.R.N. serves as an idea exchange and collaboration forum for Florida researchers interested in topics of economic development as they pertain to Florida. Currently, 13 researchers from seven institutions are members of F.E.R.N. Members meet monthly through conference calls, contribute to a quarterly newsletter, and will eventually organize conferences related to the economic development of Florida.

Study Abroad Program in Kraków/ Wrocław:
The capital of Poland for almost 500 years, Kraków boasts one of the best-preserved medieval city centers in Europe, while offering a lively, contemporary social and cultural life. Wroclaw, the “Polish Venice,” is a city of islands and bridges located at the geographic and commercial crossroads of Europe. The city enjoys a thriving arts life and a vibrant youth culture.

Students will spend four weeks in Kraków studying Polish language and culture at Jagiellonian University. They will also meet for an interdisciplinary humanities seminar taught by UF faculty that begins in Kraków and continues in Wrocław for the final two weeks of the program. Both cities will be used as the “classroom” providing a living context for the literature, history, architecture, film and art discussed in the course.

Summer Study Abroad at Vesalius College, VUB in Brussels, Belgium:
Brussels is the unofficial capital of Europe hosting the headquarters of the EU institutions as well as literally hundreds of related organizations. A primary goal of the program is to introduce students to life in Europe today through examination of the EU. Courses may include visits to the major EU institutions and guest speakers from those institutions to discuss current events like enlargement of the EU, the common currency (the Euro), and the evolving Transatlantic relationship between the EU and USA.

UF students participating in the program will be able to partake fully in student life at Vesalius College, an English language international college within the Dutch speaking Belgian Vrije Universiteit Brussels (VUB). Unless previously discussed and approved by the Program Director, all students must take a 3-unit course, EUS 4950 Overseas Studies in Europe (topic varies by year).

Personal Pilgrimage to Ireland

Connecting with my heritage through study abroad
By Terry Griffin

My life-long desire to see the place of my heritage was stirred when the Political Science department announced a new course and trip abroad offered by Professor Richard Conley. The course was Irish Government, Politics and Society. My heart leapt at the chance to not only study and understand the political struggles that defined the history of my family’s homeland (Éire), but to actually set foot on the Old Sod and see the places that I could otherwise only read about.

Reading and studying about Irish politics, society, and history does the Old Sod’s story only partial justice, though, compared to actually seeing the land and cities, and meeting the people. The course and the side trips to the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland helped clarify for me the story behind the founding of these two very young nations. Now I am able to understand that the conflict between the Irish Catholics and Protestants was in fact a struggle of national heritage and representation.

For the class trip, Professor Conley arranged an excursion to three towns that contained pivotal historic sites such as the General Post Office in Dublin where the 1917 Easter Uprising occurred. We also visited unionist and republican ghettos in Belfast, and the Northern Irish walled city of Derry where the massacre of Catholic-nationalist civil rights protestors occurred on Bloody Sunday 1972. In Dublin, we were allowed plenty of free time to poke around in the Irish capital’s many enchanting shops, museums, and the Guinness Brewery.

Our visit to the North, however, was a little more rigid, and understandably so. Belfast is less friendly to tourists simply because of what the Irish have termed “The Troubles.” The last century’s civil strife seems still very much on the minds of the Northern Irish. But our visit there was particularly enlightening because we were able to meet several former I.R.A and Unionist paramilitaries, former political prisoners and also nationalist politicians who were able to bring us closer to the struggle through their stories. Probably the most telling of all in Ireland, though, were the contrasts and qualities of the cultures in the Republic and the North.

The Republic is notable for its rapid modernization. The up and coming generations of the Irish are yet tempered by the sound traditions of their land and elders. They have a keen wit and desire for socializing and harmonizing with any and all with whom they come in contact. In the North, however, the people are still so clearly divided that even folks walking down the streets wear a stern awareness. Professor Conley insisted that we wear neutral colors, keep our political commentary to a minimum, and be ever conscious of the social tensions that make Belfast and Derry places of cautious tone. Hopefully the new unified government of republicans and unionists that formed in March 2007 will bring the people under the common shade of one state, one people, and maybe one day a unity with the Republic as one Ireland.

For me, the trip to the Republic was indeed a personal pilgrimage. I allowed myself plenty of time to set out early from the States in order to see the Irish country and several townships with my own eyes. I was so delighted to discover Éire’s cotton skies, wild, abundant daffodils, rolling green hills and hedgerows, ancient stone walls and houses, monasteries, and roaming cows and sheep. But most importantly, I was able to meet plenty of my grandmother’s family who demonstrated to me the warmth and hospitality of the Irish. That visit allowed me to understand the pivotal role that many families, like my own, played in the struggle to preserve Irish history, independence, and the success of the Republic.

Traveling allows us to remove our own cultural blinders. That is why I think the study abroad programs offered by universities are so very important to college students. If it had not been for the U.F. program, I’d most certainly still be wishing to be able to go to my family’s Old Sod one day.
